STATEMENT: We will now explore a number of options for the government to reform health care.

Q33-HC15: One option is for the government to provide health care directly. In this case the government actually runs the hospitals and clinics. Currently the US government provides health care to veterans through the Veterans Administration. Would you favor or oppose the idea of having the government provide health care services directly to all Americans who want it?

[3/5 SAMPLE A,B,E; PRESENT Q34-Q36 ON SAME SCREEN]

STATEMENT: One option is not to have the government provide health services directly but to provide health insurance. The US government currently provides health insurance to senior citizens through Medicare. Some people have proposed giving other Americans the option of getting insurance from the government, in addition to the option of private insurance. This is known as providing a 'public option.'

Q34-HC16: Here is an argument in favor of this idea:

If people cannot find affordable coverage the government needs to provide them with an option. Furthermore, the competition provided by a public option would force private insurers to lower their overhead costs, making insurance cheaper for everyone.

Q35-HC17: Here is an argument against this idea:

Because the government would not need to make profits, a government-run health insurance program would unfairly undercut private insurance companies. This would inevitably lead to a government takeover of health care and put the government between you and your doctor.

STATEMENT: Another idea for increasing coverage is for the government to require all but the smallest businesses to either provide health insurance for their workers, or contribute to a public fund to cover the uninsured. This is called an employer mandate.

Q37-HC19: Here is an argument in favor of this idea:

Employers have a moral responsibility to provide insurance to their employees. It is also unfair that companies that do not provide insurance have an economic advantage over those who do.

STATEMENT: One proposed reform is to require all people to have health insurance for themselves and their children. Those who could not afford it would receive a subsidy. Those who refuse to buy health insurance would pay a penalty.

Q40-HC22: Here is an argument in favor of this idea:

If people are not required to have health insurance, they still go to the emergency room when they get sick. Hospitals then pass these costs on to the rest of us by raising fees, or the government has to cover the cost with taxpayers' money. This is not fair.

STATEMENT: Another proposed reform, called “tort reform,” would regulate malpractice suits against doctors. There would be ceilings on the size of awards for punitive damages, and new lawsuits would be screened to make sure they had some basis.

Q43-HC25: Here is an argument in favor of this idea:

Tort reform will save money because doctors will focus on what the patient needs, instead of ordering many expensive tests just to protect themselves from lawsuits. It will also lower the cost of malpractice insurance, which leads to increased fees.

STATEMENT: Currently, the states regulate health insurance, and insurers cannot sell policies to customers in other states. One proposed reform would allow people or companies to purchase insurance from any state.

Q46-HC28: Here is an argument in favor of this idea:

The government should allow people to shop anywhere in the country for the health insurance that best meets their needs. METHODOLOGY

The survey included a total of 1,400 respondents and was conducted from September 26 – October 5, 2009. Random samples of 803 – 1,400 respondents answered different items; for these sample sizes the margin of error ranges from +/- 2.6 to 3.5 percentage points. It was fielded by Knowledge Networks, a polling, social science, and market research firm in Menlo Park, California, with a stratified random sample of its large-scale nationwide research panel. This panel itself has been randomly recruited from the national population of households having telephones; households without internet access are subsequently provided with free web access and an internet appliance. Thus the panel is not limited to those who already have home internet access. The distribution of the sample in the Web-enabled panel closely tracks the distribution of United States Census counts for the US population on age, race, Hispanic ethnicity, geographical region, employment status, income,
